

LOOKING AFTER JOINERY

Joinery has become important to the look of our homes.

As well as performing essential noise- and heat-related functions, a window enhanced by making it out of wood, a valuable material, becomes an elegant feature.

That is why we have developed very strong coatings to protect against the weather and safeguard the natural beauty of wood.

Looking after joinery also means regularly checking that its properties remain unchanged over time.

A careful check at least once a year - preferably before the summer - to assess the state of preservation of the coating film, allows the prevention of premature deterioration, keeping joinery always in perfect condition.

Don't wait until the surface film is completely ruined before starting any treatment.
Prevention is better than cure!
